Economic losses (housing, businesses, agricultural land, infrastructure) and social losses (relocation, loss of livelihood, amenity value) from coastal recession can be significant, especially in areas of dense coastal developments.

Economic

Loss of (or damage to) property in the form of homes, businesses and farmland, so relatively easy to quantify. The losses tend to be very localised and costs depend on the land's use and location.

In 2015, the EA valued English agricultural land at £21,000 per ha, and industrial/business land at £500,000 per ha.

Residential land can vary from £500,000 (North Yorkshire, cold climate, boulder clay) to £2.1 million per ha (Dorset, warm climate, Jurassic coast).

Re-rerouting a two lane road can cost between £150,000 and £250,000 per 100 m. The collapse of the section of coast supporting the South Devon Main Line Railway in February 2014 cost £35 million to repair, and businesses in the South West lost £60 million.

Other consequences:

- Economic losses to businesses if areas become unattractive and depopulated.
- A whole village could be at risk (part social)
- Falling property values, and an inability to sell property
- Unexpected recession can cause localised loss:
 - In 1993 140 mm of rain in 2 months led to the collapse of the £2 million Holbeck Hall Hotel in Scarborough, in a slump of 1 million tonnes of boulder clay.
- Loss of a major asset, and the costs of buying a new home
- An inability to insure against the loss (because its a certainty, not a risk)*
