

identifying your automatic thoughts

Individuals who struggle with negative self-talk – which is associated with wide variety of clinical issues (e.g., depression, anxiety, post-traumatic stress, eating disorders, etc.) – have certain kinds of automatic thoughts that distort their view of themselves and their world. These thoughts – which are sometimes called “thinking errors” or “negative automatic thoughts” – are irrational because they are not based on any facts; however, people experiencing psychological disorders, such as depression and anxiety, often act as if they are true.

Recognizing your irrational automatic thoughts and replacing them with rational ones can be an important part of overcoming your problems. First, identify any negative automatic thoughts you may be having. Several different types of common automatic thoughts are included on the following list. Go through this list and see if you can give any examples of situations when you have this type of thought.
