

consequential American architect of the 20th century” (Wilkinson 38). Furthermore, Frank Gehry has designed different famous buildings, such as the Walt Disney Concert Hall in Los Angeles and the Louis Vuitton Foundation in Paris (Eng 47). On the picture of his internationally famous Dancing House built in the Czech Republic, the irregularly shaped building is merged with the traditionally designed building, embracing the post-modernistic approach (Nikada). Overall, Frank Gehry’s influence on architecture has granted him the role of “one of the world’s leading architects” (Eng 47). All in all, Wright and Gehry had both been significant within the field of building design.

Differences and Similarities between the Two

Despite both being called Frank, there are significant differences between the two creators. Frank Wright is finding his inspiration from the Earth, as he is using similar colors that are found in nature like green or brown. Based on the image of Wright’s design, it evolves around straight lines and basic shapes, making his design symmetrical (Nowitz). On the other hand, Gehry is famous for using vibrant colors, such as bright blue or silver. Moreover, the Dancing house’s picture represents his love for curvatures and non-standard shapes in his work (Nikada). Therefore, the main difference between both Franks’ designs is in their approach to shapes and colors, as Wright is accessing design from the balanced perspective, and Gehry is from the non-standard. The main similarities between the two are in the impact that they had on their styles of architecture, as Wright had influenced the Prairie style and Gehry postmodernism. Thus, both Franks had been similarly significant in terms of building design, yet the approaches they use are drastically different.

Public and personal opinion

The president of the American Institute had described Wright’s impact on design as the one that can be traced through everything surrounding Americans (Wilkinson 38). For instance, the “buildings that emphasize open floor plans featuring large glass picture windows pulling in natural light and fronting views of the outdoors; fireplaces anchoring common areas where families gather...” (Wilkinson 38). Thus, his
