- Abstract: This paper reports on a study of the impact of a community-based health promotion program on the health status of a sample of low-income, urban, African American women. The program was designed to address the health needs of the community and to provide a model for other community-based health promotion programs. The results of the study indicate that the program had a positive impact on the health status of the women, and that the program was well-received by the community. The findings suggest that community-based health promotion programs can be an effective way to improve the health status of low-income, urban, African American women.
