QUICK-CHECK questions

- 1 Why is it important for all individuals to have regular eye checks, particularly as they age?
Many eye defects can occur as one ages. In some cases where treatment is available, early detection means that treatment can begin sooner, and this may halt or slow the progress of the disease.
- 2 Explain what advice you would give to other members of your family if you found out that your great-grandmother became blind due to glaucoma.
You might advise your family that, because glaucoma is more prevalent in some families than others, any blood relative of your great-grandmother is at greater risk of developing the disease than a member of the general public. Hence, any blood relative should have their eyes tested for the first signs of the disease at regular intervals, particularly after they have turned 40 years. Early detection improves the chances of halting or delaying glaucoma by having appropriate treatment.
- 3 Distinguish between the members of the following pairs:
 - a CNS and PNS
The CNS (central nervous system) comprises the brain and the spinal cord.
The PNS (peripheral nervous system) comprises the sensory (afferent) nervous system and the motor (efferent) nervous system.
 - b sensory neuron and effector neuron
A sensory neuron carries impulses to the central nervous system from sensory receptors.
An effector neuron carries impulses away from the central nervous system to effector cells.
 - c axon and dendrite
A dendrite is one of the many branching extensions or projections that extend from the cell body of a typical motor neuron. Dendrites carry information into the neuron.
An axon is the single extension from the cell body of a typical motor neuron. An axon carries impulses away from the neuron.
 - d sensory and motor nervous systems
The sensory nervous system contains the sensory neurons that carry impulses to the central nervous system (CNS) from the external environment via the sense organs.
The motor nervous system contains the motor neurons that carry impulses away from the central nervous system (CNS) to effector cells.
