

Chap 18Blood Vessels

- Blood vessel walls are three layers:
 - Tunica Intima – innermost layer, an endothelium, forms a slick, shiny surface continuous with the lining of the heart. Blood flows easily across the surface.
 - Tunica Media – middle layer, thick and composed of elastic tissue and smooth muscle.
 - Tunica Adventitia – outer layer composed of tough connective tissue.
- Arteries – walls are thick, tough, and elastic to withstand high pressure of blood pumped through them.
 - Conductance vessels – large arteries conduct blood from the heart to the arterioles.
- Arterioles – smallest arteries, composed of smooth muscle. Function is to contract and relax.
 - Resistance vessels – ability to contract and relax, to affect blood flow.
- Capillaries – thinnest walls made up of a single layer of endothelium on a delicate basement membrane. The walls allow water and dissolved substances including oxygen to move across the wall from the blood into tissue spaces.
 - Exchange vessels – ability to allow substances to move through the walls.
- Venules – capillaries converge, and the walls become thicker as the venules form larger veins.
- Capacitance vessels – veins have the ability to store blood in them.

Chapter 19.Blood Pressure

- The amount of pressure exerted by the flow of blood on the walls of the blood vessels.
- 120 / 80 systolic over diastolic is considered normal.

Hypertension – BP up Drugs – antihypertensives.

Hypotension – BP is down. Usually nothing is done.

Orthostatic Hypotension – when a patient changes position and bp drops.
