01

Initial concept sketch showing a single rectangular block. The sketch is simple and abstract, representing the starting point of the development process.

02

Development of the initial concept into a more complex, stepped form. The sketch shows the block being divided into sections, indicating the beginning of the conceptual development process.

03

Further refinement of the stepped form, showing the addition of a central section. The sketch illustrates the progression of the design, with the central section being added to the existing form.

04

Final conceptual development showing the completed stepped form integrated into a landscape context. The sketch includes trees, a path, and a body of water, providing a sense of scale and context for the building design.

Early Category and Concept Development David H. Rakison, Lisa M. Oakes, 2008-12-30 Whether or not infants earliest perception of the world is a blooming buzzing confusion it is not long before they come to perceive structure and order among the objects and events around them At the core of this process and cognitive development in general is the ability to categorize to group events objects or properties together and to form mental representations or concepts that encapsulate the commonalities and structure of these categories Categorization is the primary means of coding experience underlying not only perceptual and reasoning processes but also inductive inference and language The aim of this book is to bring together the most recent findings and theories about the origins and early development of categorization and conceptual abilities Despite recent advances in our understanding of this area a number of hotly debated issues remain at the center of the controversy over categorization Researchers continue to ask questions such as Which mechanisms for categorization are available at birth and which emerge later What are the relative roles of perceptual similarity and nonobservable properties in early classification What is the role of contextual variation in categorization by infants and children Do different experimental procedures reveal the same kind of knowledge Can computational models simulate infant and child categorization How do computational models inform behavioral research What is the impact of language on category development How does language partition the world This book is the first to address these and other key questions within a single volume The authors present a diverse set of views representing cutting edge empirical and theoretical advances in the field The result is a thorough review of empirical contributions to the literature and a wealth of fresh theoretical perspectives on early categorization

Concept Development of a Hydraulic Skimmer System for Recovery of Floating Oil John R. Blacklaw, Pacific Northwest Laboratory, 1971

Theoretical Nursing Afaf Ibrahim Meleis, 2011 An additional assumption was that the processes for theory development were new to nursing and hence nurses in graduate programs learned strategies for advancing knowledge from other disciplines This assumption was debunked with the knowledge that nurses were always engaged in knowledge development driven by their experiences in clinical practice Because of these assumptions most of the early writing about theory development was about outlining strategies that should be used rather than strategies that have already been used in the discipline to develop theories Theorists themselves did not uncover or adequately discuss ways by which they developed their theories therefore the tendency was to describe processes that were based on theories developed in other disciplines mainly the physical and social sciences And an implicit assumption was made that there should be a single strategy for theory development some claiming to begin the process from practice and others believing it should be driven by research Provided by publisher
