Consumer Protection Model in the Practice of Selling and Purchasing Apartments With Pre-Project Selling System in Indonesia Dian Cahayani, 2020 The writing of this article aims to outline a legal protection model for consumers buying and selling apartments in Indonesia Most of the sale and purchase of apartments is done with a pre project selling system namely sales before the building is completed This practice is at high risk for consumers so the law must play a role in providing protection This article is based on legal research normative namely research conducted by studying and analyzing legal materials and problems related to research The results of the study show that consumers are the parties most often disadvantaged in buying and selling with a pre project selling system

Consumers who buy apartments have to approve the making of an income agreement known as PPJB Agreement on the Sale and Purchase Whereas PPJB is an agreement document that has weaknesses because it does not provide protection to consumers who have weak training power So that legal protection is needed for consumers by applying the principles of protection based on justice by involving the government directly in regulating and overseeing the sale and purchase of apartments with a pre project selling system Independent Study Consumer Behavior and Marketing Factors Important to Renting Decisions Toward Apartment Putthipong Vanapitak, Mahāwitthayālai Kasētsāt. Business Administration (M.B.A. International Program), 2012
