- support for converged network traffic
- support for distributed administrative control
- support for 90 percent reliability
- support for critical applications
- support for limited growth

All modern enterprise networks are expected to support critical applications, converged network traffic, diverse business needs, and provide centralized administrative control. - interfaces with line (protocol) status and I/O statistics
- interface information, including whether an ACL is enabled on the interface

The show ip protocols command displays information about the routing protocols that are configured, the networks the router is advertising, and the default administrative distance. The show interfaces command displays interfaces with line (protocol) status, bandwidth, delay, reliability, encapsulation, duplex, and I/O statistics. The show ip interfaces command displays interface information, including protocol status, the IP address, whether a helper address is configured, and whether an ACL is enabled on the interface. The show protocols command displays information about the routed protocol that is enabled and the protocol status of interfaces.

- immediately replace a non-functioning module, service or device on a network
- implement STP portfast between the switches on the network
- continually purchase backup equipment for the network

One method of implementing redundancy is path redundancy, installing alternate physical paths for data to traverse the network. Redundant links in a switched network supports high availability and can be used for load balancing, reducing congestion on the network.
