

Best Practices: Template Organization & Maintenance

Focus	Why?
Set up a Framework for Organization	Design template collections for the team/program/procedure (rather than for each user). Admins for each team should be responsible for managing permissions to the Collections, and for keeping templates up to date.
Create an appropriate permission structure for your template collections	Remember to limit the number of people who can create, modify, or archive templates within each template collection. When possible, use Team-Based Permissions and leverage team admins to give scientific leads the admin rights to archive templates. Users with "Write" or "Admin" permission can create and edit templates for their team. All users can notify Collection owners of necessary changes.
Maintain Templates	When template collections become too large and cumbersome, scientists may become overwhelmed or may lose track of which template is most up-to-date. Delegate Admins/Super Users to keep templates up to date. Other users can notify Admins/Super Users owners of necessary changes.
Retire Templates	Create "Archived Templates" collection that only admins can access (Organization permission set to "None") for retired Templates. These Templates will not appear for users in Benchmarking.
