

Edmund Cartwright - Water-Powered Loom (1784)

INVENTIONS

Edmund Cartwright's water-powered loom, the first to be used in the textile industry, was a major invention. It was a large, complex machine that used water power to operate. The loom was made of wood and had a large wheel on the right side that was turned by water. This wheel was connected to a series of gears and levers that controlled the weaving process. The loom was used to weave cloth, and it was a significant improvement over the hand loom. It was used in the textile industry for many years, and it was a major step forward in the development of the textile industry.
