(b) The defendant's right to counsel at pre-arrest proceedings is further given in the instruction stating that defendant may file a motion to suppress evidence if he is arrested by an unauthorized officer. The instruction states that because of the defendant's right to counsel before arrest, the evidence obtained from questioning without representation, and given by the defendant before arrest, is not admissible against him and represents the difference in the required rules. The instruction states that if an individual is not represented, any statement he gives before arrest is inadmissible against him. See, e.g., People v. Jones.
