The Range Dwellers, the Original Western Novel (Large Print) B. M. Bower,2015-03-05 I m something like the old maid you read about the one who always knows all about babies and just how to bring them up to righteous maturity I ve got a mighty strong conviction that I know heaps that my dad never thought of about the proper training for a healthy male human I don t suppose I ll ever have a chance to demonstrate my wisdom but if I do there are a few things that won t happen to my boy If I ve got a comfortable wad of my own the boy shall have his fun without any nagging so long as he keeps clean and honest He shall go to any college he may choose and right here is where my wisdom will sit up and get busy If I m fool enough to let that kid have more money than is healthy for him and if I go to sleep while he s wising up to the art of making it fade away without leaving anything behind to tell the tale and learning a lot of habits that aren t doing him any good I won t come down on him with both feet and tell him all the different brands of fool he s been and mourn because the Lord in His mercy laid upon me this burden of an unregenerate son I shall try and remember that he s the son of his father and not expect too much of him It s long odds I shall find points of resemblance a plenty between us and the more cussedness he develops the more I shall see myself in him reflected I don't mean to be hard on dad He was always good to me in his way He's got more things than a son to look after and as that son is supposed to have a normal allowance of gray matter and is no physical weakling he probably took it for granted that the son could look after himself which the mines and railroads and ranches that represent his millions can't

M. Bower, 2015-03-05 The wind rising again as the sun went down mourned lonesomely at the northwest corner of the cabin as if it felt the desolateness of the barren icy hills and the black hollows between and of the angry red sky with its purple shadows lowering over the unhappy land and would make fickle friendship with some human thing Charming Billy hearing the crooning wail of it knew well the portent and sighed Perhaps he too felt something of the desolateness without and perhaps he too longed for some human companionship He sent a glance of half conscious disapproval around the untidy cabin He had been dreaming aimlessly of a place he had seen not so long ago a place where the stove was black and shining with a fire crackling cheerfully inside and a teakettle with straight unmarred spout and dependable handle singing placidly to itself and puffing steam with an air of lazy comfort as if it were smoking a cigarette The stove had stood in the southwest corner of the room and the room was warm with the heat of it and the floor was white and had a strip of rag carpet reaching from the table to a corner of the stove There was a red cloth with knotted fringe on the table and a bed in another corner had a red and white patchwork spread and puffy white pillows There had been a woman but Charming Billy shut his eyes mentally to the woman because he was not accustomed to them and he was not at all sure that he wanted to be accustomed they did not fit in with the life he lived He felt dimly that in a way they were like the heaven his mother had taught him altogether perfect and altogether unattainable and not to be thought of with any degree of familiarity So his memory of the woman was indistinct as of something which did not properly belong to the picture He clung instead to the memory of the warm stove and the strip of carpet and the table with the red cloth and to the puffy white pillows on the bed

Sawtooth Ranch, the Original Western Novel B. M. Bower, 2015-03-09

Quirt Creek flowed sluggishly between willows which sagged none too gracefully across its deeper pools or languished beside the rocky stretches that were bone dry from July to October with a narrow channel in the centre where what water there was hurried along to the pools below For a mile or more where the land lay fairly level in a platter like valley set in the lower hills the mud that rimmed the pools was scored deep with the tracks of the TJ up and down cattle as the double monogram of Hunter and Johnson was called A hard brand to work a cattleman would tell you Yet the TJ up and down herd never seemed to increase beyond a niggardly three hundred or so though the Quirt ranch was older than its lordly neighbours the Sawtooth Cattle Company who numbered their cattle by tens of thousands and whose riders must have strings of fifteen horses apiece to keep them going older too than many a modest ranch that had flourished awhile and had finished as line camps of the Sawtooth when the Sawtooth bought ranch and brand for a lump sum that looked big to the rancher who immediately departed to make himself a new home elsewhere older than others which had somehow gone to pieces when the rancher died or went to the penitentiary under the stigma of a long sentence as a cattle thief There were many such for the Sawtooth powerful and stern against outlawry tolerated no pilfering from their thousands
