The deterioration of students' performance in the Botswana General Certificate of Education (BGCSE) examination results is a disturbing trend that bothers parents, teachers, policy makers and government. This problem prompts this study on dimensionality analysis of students' performance in 2013 BGCSE Agriculture Examination, to determine its dimensionality. The population of the study was all the 12784 students' responses who sat for the 2013 BGCSE Agriculture examination. The students' responses were analysed using factor analysis and IRT (1PL, 2PL and 3PL) models to examine the psychometric parameter estimates of the forty test items; dimensionality analysis and the chi square test for each test item that fitted in the three IRT models. The findings revealed that examination was not unidimensional. None of the 40 items fit the 1PL. Only one fitted the 2PL and 8 items fitted the 3PL. In conclusion, the results of this study, as it explored the national assessment tool, showed that 2013 BGCSE Agriculture Examination was not unidimensionality. It was, therefore recommended that test developers and examination bodies should consider improving the quality of their test items by conducting IRT psychometric analysis for item validation.

Keywords: Agriculture education, unidimensionality, factor analysis, item response theory, invariance, psychometric analysis.

INTRODUCTION

There is not yet an art through which educationalists can look at a learner on the face or open up his/her brain to know if he/she has learned or how much he has learned. So educational measurement, that is the art and science of quantifying or qualify the cognitive, affective and psychomotor behaviour of learners is inevitable. A valid measure for behaviours analysis in particular cognitive is well classified by the Bloom taxonomy. Thus in education, items are developed as challenges or task which when encountered by a testee will provoke an action appropriate for the trait under measurement latent in the testee (Nenty, 2004).

In return, it is also imperative to evaluate the dimensionality evidence of any given examination items as a standard practices in educational measurement. Such evaluation of items is also very important to teachers, examiners and the public in general for decision making. According to Siamisang and Nenty (2012), a test is never better than the quality of its items, so to identify problematic items is only possible through item analysis. Many scholars (Nenty, 2004; Nworgu, 2011; Umoinyang, 2011) have recommended that item response theory (IRT) approach be applied to analyze dimensionality of examination as a means of contributing to test fairness.

According to Hattie (1965) in Hill (2007) "one of the most crucial and basic assumptions of IRT is that a set of items forming an instrument of all measure just one thing in common" (p. 139). A good measurement model should provide a guide to the process of constructing and administering a test in such a way that the trait interaction with the tasks implied by items depend on, and only on, the values of the trait and that of each item designed to measure the trait. Hence unidimensionality assumption is fundamental for a valid operationalization
