governments businesses and individuals worldwide Attacks have been initiated against individuals corporations and countries Targets have included government networks companies and political organizations depending upon whether the attacker was seeking military intelligence conducting diplomatic or industrial espionage engaging in cybercrime or intimidating political activists In addition national borders mean little or nothing to cyber attackers and attributing an attack to a specific location can be difficult which may make responding problematic

Crs Report for Congress Catherine A. Theohary, Congressional Research Service: The Libr, John Rollins, 2013-11 The Internet is used by international insurgents jihadists and terrorist organizations as a tool for radicalization and recruitment a method of propaganda distribution a means of communication and ground for training Although there are no known reported incidents of cyberattacks on critical infrastructure as acts of terror this could potentially become a tactic in the future There are several methods for countering terrorist and insurgent information operations on the Internet The federal government has organizations that conduct strategic communications counterpropaganda and public diplomacy activities The National Framework for Strategic Communication guides how interagency components are to integrate their activities However these organizations may be stovepiped within agencies and competing agendas may be at stake This report does not discuss technical and Internet architecture design solutions Some may interpret the law to prevent federal agencies from conducting propaganda activities that may potentially reach domestic audiences Others may wish to dismantle all websites that are seen to have malicious content or to facilitate acts of terror while some may have a competing interest in keeping a site running and monitoring it for intelligence value Key issues for Congress Although the Comprehensive National Cybersecurity Initiative addresses a federal cybersecurity strategy and departmental

Access to CRS Reports Daniel P. Mulhollan, 2007 Crs Report for Congress Congressional Research Service: The Libr, Clay Wilson, 2013-11 Persistent computer security vulnerabilities may expose U S critical infrastructure and government computer systems to possible cyber attack by terrorists possibly affecting the economy or other areas of national security This report discusses possible cyber capabilities of terrorists and sponsoring nations describes how computer security vulnerabilities might be exploited through a cyber terror attack and raises some potential issues for Congress Currently no evidence exists that terrorist organizations are actively planning to use computers as a means of attack and there is disagreement among some observers about whether critical infrastructure computers offer an effective target for furthering terrorists goals However terrorist organizations now use the Internet to communicate and news reports have indicated that Al Qaeda and other groups may be using computer technology to help plan future terrorist attacks At the same time nuisance attacks against computer systems and the Internet are becoming more rapid and widespread indicating that computer system vulnerabilities persist despite growing concerns about possible effects on national security This report presents a working definition for the term cyber terrorism plus background information describing how current technology and management processes may leave computers exposed to cyber attack and a discussion of possible effects of a cyber
