

18-2 Modern Evolutionary Classification

- Back in Linnaeus's time when classifying organisms he compared structures and details of anatomy

Problems with Traditional Classification

- Sometimes, due to convergent evolution organisms that are quite different from each other evolve similar body structures
- Ex.)

Evolutionary Classification

- Darwin's theory of evolution changed the entire way that biologists thought about classification
- Biologists now group organisms into categories that represent _____, not just physical similarities

Classification Using Cladograms

- Many biologists now prefer a method called _____
- This method of classification identifies and considers only those characteristics that arise as lineages evolve over time
