

Cost Accounting Definitions

10. Indirect Cost:

An indirect cost is one that cannot be conveniently and economically identified with a cost objective and must be apportioned to the cost objective or segment under consideration on some equitable basis.

11. Fixed Cost:

It does not respond to change in activity level within a limited range, called the relevant range. A fixed cost remains constant in total regardless of changes in activity. For example, Depreciation of Factory building, salary of plant manager etc.

12. Variable Cost:

A variable cost is one the total of which changes in direct proportion to changes in activity level. If production increases by ten percent, total variable costs will also increase by ten percent.

13. Semi variable Cost:

A semi variable cost is composed of both fixed cost and variable cost. Semi variable cost respond to changes in activity level, but due to the presence of fixed cost it does not change in direct proportion to production volume.

14. Differential Costs:

It assist decision makers while making a choice between different alternatives. It are those costs of total costs of two or more alternatives which vary under each alternative.

15. Opportunity Cost:

It is a concept used in the selection of alternative uses of resources. Decision makers select that alternative use of resources from which they expect the maximum net return. It is the net return that could be obtained from the second best alternative that has been rejected.

16. Sunk Cost:

It is a cost for a cost that has already been incurred and now cannot be avoided or recovered. Consequently it is irrelevant for the current decision making situation. For example, a company bought a building for 100,000 but now use it for its product sale.

17. Costing System:

It determines and reports to management total and unit cost of product or project or service, with details of cost components.

18. Voucher System:

It is a system of internal control over cash payments. It provides management with means of ensuring that every cash payment is properly authorized and correct amount is being paid so the conditions will be there to avoid cash misstatement.
