Improve Writing Skills for Adults: ENGLISH WRITING CHEATSHEET, YOU'RE WELCOME - Simple, Fun, and Proven Strategies To Impress Anyone In Writing and Co James Powers,2021-12-31 The English language whether written or spoken is created upon grammar Grammar is the set of rules that will control the pattern that is spoken so that everyone understands what is being said Grammar is what tells us that we say I went to school instead of I school to went or School went to I when you are trying to get something across Primarily in English you can expect to see four types of sentences that we will go over now Before we get into the sentence structures themselves let's talk a bit about English English syntax the order that words are given tells us the order to put our words In English syntax usually tells us that we need to speak in subject verb object form This isn't as complicated as it sounds Let's break down those three words briefly Subject refers to the person that does the action It is the doer it is the noun that the sentence is based on For example if you see the sentence I went to school the word I is the subject I am the one that is doing the thing Verb refers to the action as we have gone over It is the thing that is done

Object is the thing that I acted upon It is the receiver of the verb Not all sentences will have this For example I play doesn't have an object but the sentence I play ball does In that instance ball is the object Of course other modifiers can go into the sentence such as the adjectives adverbs and prepositions but for the most part all sentences will typically have the subject verb and object
