

Question 1- Inclusive Education

This essay serves the purpose of critically discussing the contributing factors that prevent the successful implementation of the inclusive education policy in South African schools. In addition to this, one will make reference to policies that the government have put into place to bridge this gap. Inclusive education is a term that adapts the educational syllabus and teaching methods to cater for learners of all backgrounds and 'disabilities' (Landsberg, 2016). The aim of inclusive education is to help learners reach their full potential and have an equal opportunity to do so. Unfortunately, there are factors that prevent successful implementation of inclusive education, especially within the South African environment/context. One of the main attributes that prevents implementation is the lack of resources (Dalton, 2012). South Africa has limited resources to cater for all learners needs. This also includes funds. There is a high need for funds to support the structure of inclusive education, many schools are in poverty-stricken areas and have the bare minimum in order to cater for their learners, therefore, these schools do not have the means to cater for students with special needs. Due to lack of funds, there are also inadequate schooling facilities to cater for the learners that need additional assistance, e.g. facility for learners who have a hearing impairment (Dalton, 2012). On this note, we can add on by illustrating the notion that individuals may not have the financial capacity to afford sending their children to facilities. There is a high poverty rate in South Africa, majority cannot afford the fees or tools needed to help their child's schooling career (Mottswa & Mogadi, 2012). This prevents the child from reaching their full potential and being a part of an inclusive educational system. Teachers in schools are not always equipped with the knowledge to understand nor manage learners from various backgrounds (Mottswa, 2012). This limits the learner's growth as they are not given the appropriate support from their educators. Teachers require workshops to identify learning barriers and ways to tackle the issues that arise (Landsberg, 2016). It should be noted that South Africa has implemented an inclusive
