

HOW TO WRITE A NOVEL

get career
authors
write. sell. repeat.

STEP 1: DO YOUR HOMEWORK

The market is unkind to uneducated writers. Before you write a single word of your novel, you MUST decide the audience you are targeting.

The publishing industry is organized by genre. Each genre has trends, expectations, and standards you must understand before you can sell into it, otherwise agents, editors, and readers will reject your work.

STEP 2: FIND YOUR HOOK

A book without a hook is like a song without a melody. Just like a catchy melody keeps you listening, a hook keeps readers turning pages.

A hook is a question posed at the beginning of the story that isn't answered until the end. The question doesn't have to be overtly asked, but you the author must know it, pose it, and answer it. Most hooks are variations on the "What If?" question.

STEP 3: CULTIVATE A CAST

Novels are about people. Great novels are about fascinating people. If your lead characters are not interesting, surprising, colorful, lovable, hatable, heart-warming, and blood pressure rising then no one will care. For readers to talk about your book, the cast needs to make an impact. "Cultivate" your characters like you would a friendship. You must know them inside and out—every quality & flaw.

STEP 4: INCITING EVENT

Just as a rocket can't reach orbit without blasting off, your novel needs a catalyst to propel the story forward. Regardless of genre, you must have something to kick off the novel which will surprise/entice the reader. Some examples: a murder, something lost, something found, a tragedy, a birth, a new love or opportunity, a life changing choice

STEP 5: USE THE THREE-ACT STRUCTURE

Don't reinvent the wheel, let the 3-Act structure be your guide. If it's good enough for Shakespeare and Spielberg, then it's good enough for you. Good story-telling requires structure. Readers expect stories to have complication, subplots, a climax, and resolution. Use the same framework as the masters and readers will reward you for it.
