Stay in your home

Smart updates will ensure it ages well as you get older.

Many of us would like to stay in our home as we get older. Our ability to do so could depend on how easy it will be to get around the house if we develop physical limitations. "We're living longer, but our homes are not aging as well as we are," says Bill Owens, who runs a construction company in Columbus, Ohio, and has a Certified Aging in Place Specialist (CAPS) designation from the National Association of Home Builders.

There are simple and sometimes inexpensive ways you can tweak renovation projects to make your home more suitable. Home-accessory and appliance manufacturers offer sleek, stylish designs that are functional for the young and old alike. And making just a few of the changes discussed here might increase your home's resale value.

Following are some ideas to consider when you're replacing fixtures or appliances or doing home renovations. The prices were supplied by the experts we talked with but could vary depending on the cost of labor and building materials in your area.

REMOVE ENTRANCE BARRIERS

A raised surface at the bottom of a doorway could be a tripping hazard for anyone with limited mobility and especially problematic for people using a walker or a wheelchair. An automatic door bottom will solve the problem. To install one, any surface above the floor level within a doorway is removed, then a spring-loaded device is attached to the bottom of the door. It drops a strip of insulation down to securely fill the extra space below the door as it closes, and automatically lifts it up as the door is opened. The devices cost around $75. Dan Bawden, a builder who helped create the CAPS program and owner of Legal Eagle Contractors in Houston, estimates that installation will run an additional $225 to $275.

Aging in place is worth the cost

More than 90 percent of people ages 65 or older want to keep living in their own home and are willing to pay for the services they need to make that happen. A survey by AARP of 940 people ages 65 or older shows the percentage with limitations that might require home care or modifications.

Source: AARP/Health@Home 2.0, April 2011. Survey was conducted in 2010. Number of respondents ages 85 and older was too small for statistical comparison. *Activities include walking, climbing stairs, reaching, lifting, and carrying.
