Japanese-Americans

After December 7, 1941, Japanese-Americans were sent to internment camps.

The War Relocation Authority was established to help Japanese-Americans. It was a federal government program that provided financial and other assistance to Japanese-Americans who were sent to internment camps. The War Relocation Authority was established in 1942 and was the only federal agency that provided financial and other assistance to Japanese-Americans.

1. Japanese-American Internment

During World War II, the United States government interned Japanese-Americans. This was done because the government was worried that Japanese-Americans might be spies or saboteurs. The government was also worried that Japanese-Americans might be helping the Japanese war effort.

Japanese-Americans were sent to internment camps. These camps were located in the western United States. The camps were run by the War Relocation Authority. The camps were designed to provide Japanese-Americans with a place to live and work. The camps were also designed to provide Japanese-Americans with education and other services.

All members of the War Relocation Authority were required to provide financial and other assistance to Japanese-Americans. This was done because the government was worried that Japanese-Americans might be spies or saboteurs. The government was also worried that Japanese-Americans might be helping the Japanese war effort.

Opportunity and Adjustment

After the war, Japanese-Americans were allowed to return to the United States. Many of them found that life was very different. They had to adjust to a new way of life. They had to find new jobs and new homes. They had to learn a new language. They had to learn a new way of thinking. They had to learn a new way of life.
