Coping when Everything is Digital? ,2004 Paper-digital Integration in Document Management for Knowledge Workers Olha Bondarenko, 2003 Paperspace ,2006 Personal document management systems provide good support for storing and organizing digital documents However there are no computer tools that support organization of paper documents on our desks We ran a study of people s organization of their office desk space with respect to their digital workspace This study resulted in a set of requirements for a media bridging tool Based on these requirements we built a prototype media bridging tool called PaperSpace that uses computer vision to link paper and digital documents The system also tracks piles of paper documents on the real desktop and links those papers to digital documents stored in the computer Digital documents can be sorted and grouped according to the physical layout of the corresponding papers on the desk The system automatically creates digital piles of documents in a simulated desktop that reflect the paper piles on the real desktop The user can access valuable information through the system such as printing statistics location of a printed document on the desk and past projects and their documents A two week user evaluation of the system showed interesting usage scenarios and future trends for improving user interaction
