

9. Summarize the process of glycolysis.

Two ATP molecules are added to a glucose molecule. The glucose now has two extra phosphates, making it unstable and causing it to split in half. Then, three reactions yield energy. First, the two glucose halves both attach to a high-energy phosphate group. The glucose then donates high-energy electrons and hydrogen ions (protons) to electron carriers called NAD+. This results in NADH molecules that are high-energy electron carriers. These NADH molecules are used later in cellular respiration. Then, glycolysis continues and more bonds between the glucose molecules are broken. Energy is recaptured by attaching phosphate groups to molecules of ADP, which creates energy-rich ATP. In addition, two water molecules are produced. Finally, two more ADP molecules take the last two phosphate groups and make two more ATP molecules. The glucose is now two pyruvate molecules.

10. What are the products of glycolysis?

The products are two molecules of pyruvate, two molecules of water, two NADH molecules and four ATP molecules.

11. What is the net energy yield at the end of glycolysis?

The net yield is two NADH molecules and two ATP molecules because two ATP molecules were required to start glycolysis. There is also energy remaining in the pyruvate molecules.

Part III: The Krebs Cycle

12. Where does the Krebs cycle take place?

It takes place in the mitochondria of cells.

13. In the first series of reactions for the Krebs cycle, what are the products from the original two pyruvate molecules?

The products are two carbon dioxide molecules, two NADH molecules, and two Acetyl CoA molecules.

14. What is the first outcome of the Krebs cycle?

The first outcome is the production of a molecule with six carbon atoms.

15. What is created (what are the products) during the second outcome of the Krebs cycle?

The products during the second part of the Krebs cycle are two NADH molecules and two carbon dioxide molecules.

16. What are the three products of the third phase of the Krebs cycle?

The three products are one ATP molecule, one NADH molecule, and one FADH<sub>2</sub> molecule.

17. What happens at the very end of the Krebs cycle (the final outcome)?

The cycle's starting molecule reforms, and then the cycle repeats one more time.
