

Coronary sulcus indentation between atria & ventricles

Atrioventricular sulcus
right & left ventricles

MODIFIED MUSCULAR TISSUE electrical information associated w/ contraction of heart is spread through the heart by specialized CARDIAC tissue known as conducting tissue

once SA node is depolarized, the info spread across the muscles of the atria from right to left

Atrioventricular node: prevents flow of electrical information between the atria & ventricles; spreads across atria but doesn't spread directly to ventricle because of this ring of non-conductive
tissue

Atrioventricular node: however, this node conducting tissue, collects the information and sends it via the bundle of His - the right & left bundle branches down the interventricular septum to apex of heart

- ① Blood in inferior & superior vena cava enter into right atria
- ② Then passes through tricuspid valve into right ventricle
- ③ Right ventricle contracts, blood is forced out of pulmonary valve into pulmonary artery
- ④ Then travels to the lungs. After oxygenated blood returns to the heart via pulmonary veins
- ⑤ Emptied into the left atria, then passes through bicuspid valve to left ventricle
- ⑥ When left ventricle contracts blood is passed through aortic valve to aorta
