Hitler's Rise to Power

In the early 1900s, Germany was one of the most powerful countries in Europe. But in 1918, World War I ended with a German defeat. The winning nations blamed Germany for the war, and through a treaty signed in 1919, they stripped Germany of its territories, placed limits on the size of Germany's army, and ordered the country to pay for damages they had inflicted on other countries during the war. These punishments weakened Germany's economy and left its people impoverished and humiliated. The German people were angry and felt they were being mistreated.

Germany's instability following World War I resulted in the rise of many nationalist groups, such as the National Socialist German 'Workers' Party, led by Adolf Hitler. This group, widely known as the Nazi Party, was formed in 1920 and attracted a large following of lower-middle-class German citizens. Hitler galvanized support from huge groups of people, allowing him to successfully spread his hate and anger. He insisted that Jewish people were to blame for all of Germany's current problems and that Aryans, non-Jewish Caucasians, were the superior race.

Shortly after the worldwide Great Depression began in 1929, Germany's aging president, Paul von Hindenburg, proved he was no longer an effective leader. In early 1933, he appointed Hitler as Chancellor of Germany, giving him legitimate power in the country's government. Almost immediately, Hitler became a dictator and, with the Nazi party, moved aggressively to undo Germany's democracy and implement his plans.
