Résumé

Durant la dernière décennie, l'Algérie a encouragé l'adoption de techniques d'irrigation plus économes en eau, comme l'irrigation par goutte-à-goutte, en subventionnant les agriculteurs grâce à un plan national de développement agricole. Cette initiative n'a connu le succès qu'auprès d'un nombre restreint d'agriculteurs. L'objectif de l'étude est d'identifier les déterminants qui influencent les agriculteurs algériens dans leur choix d'adopter le système d'irrigation par goutte-à-goutte. Du point de vue méthodologique, le modèle "Logit" nous a permis de mettre en évidence les variables significatives qui influent sur la stratégie des agriculteurs quant à l'adoption de cette innovation. Les résultats montrent que montant de subvention, type de culture pratiquée, niveau d'instruction affectent positivement l'adoption du goutte-à-goutte. En revanche, le coût de l'investissement, les conditions d'accès à la subvention et le manque d'ouvrage hydraulique semblent avoir un effet négatif sur l'adoption de ce système d'irrigation économe en eau.

Abstract

Determinants of conversion to drip irrigation systems by farmers: The case of the Mitidja plain in Algeria

Over the last decade, Algeria has encouraged the adoption of water saving systems by providing subsidies to farmers through a national plan for agricultural development, with particular attention paid to drip irrigation. This initiative has been successful only for a limited number of farmers. This work aims at analysing the determinants that influence the Algerian farmers in converting to the drip irrigation system. This work is based on a model (Logit) that allowed us to identify variables significantly influencing the innovation behaviour of farmers regarding the decision to adopt the system. The results show that subsidies, type of crop and educational level have positively affected adoption. However, the investment costs, conditions needed to access and lack hydraulic structure seem to have a negative affect the adoption drip irrigation.

Key words: Algeria; irrigation methods; simulation model.

Subject: economy and rural development; tools and methods; water.
