CHAPTER 1

Computerized Provider Order Entry

Patricia Hoey, W. Paul Nichol, and Robert Silverman

KEY DEFINITIONS

Alert—a patient- and context-sensitive warning presented to the ordering provider at the time an order is being entered. Used to inform the provider of a clinical concern relevant to the patient and order being placed. Alerts are called "order checks" in some EHR systems.

Clinical Reminder—a context-sensitive electronic prompt to the provider to perform an intervention or procedure, based on the patient's specific clinical data as applied to a set of logical conditions.

Computerized Provider Order Entry—direct entry of medical orders into a healthcare system's EHR by licensed independent practitioners or other staff with specific ordering privileges, and not by clinical or administrative support staff.

Corollary Orders—orders entered as adjuncts to a primary order, e.g., orders for laboratory tests to monitor effects of a medication order, orders for special diets in preparation for a medical procedure.

Downtime—the period of time during which the healthcare facility's computer system is unavailable and electronic order entry is not possible.

e-Iatrogenesis—patient harm caused at least in part by the application of health information technology.[1]

Electronic Health Record (EHR) systems—software programs designed for use by healthcare systems to electronically place, store, and retrieve clinical orders, results, notes, reports, and other information related to the care of patients.

File Architecture—also referred to as the medication masterfile, a compilation of interconnected files and records that contain data elements that compose the medication and clinical information presented for use in an EHR system.

Notification—a patient- and context-sensitive prompt to the ordering provider, attending physician, primary provider, or care team to alert them of new information (i.e., abnormal lab result) or tasks in need of completion (i.e., unsigned order or note).
