

Chapter 1 - The Science of Biology

- science: derived from the Latin verb "to know." A human endeavor that uses the scientific method to answer questions and gain knowledge.
- biology: the scientific study of living things and how they evolved.
- hypothesis: educated guess. A possible explanation of some observation. May have very little evidence to support it.
- experiment: the test of a hypothesis.
- placebo: see outline.
- variable: see outline.
- theory: stronger than a hypothesis. It is supported by a considerable amount of evidence and is widely accepted by the scientific community.
- evolution: a population of organisms changes over time to become better adapted to a certain environment.

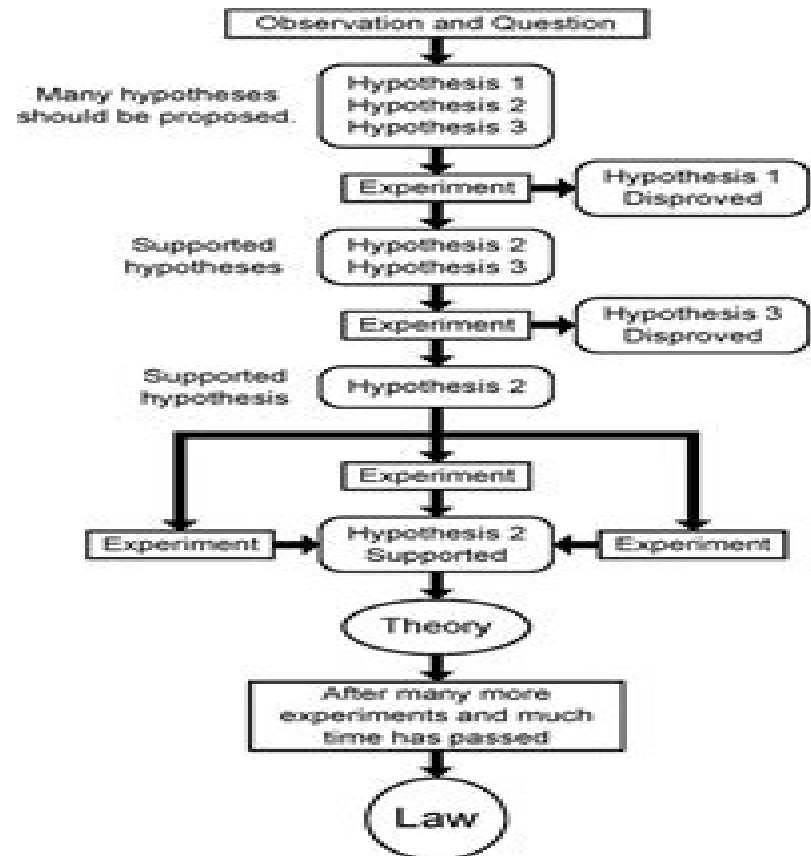

Scientific Method

- Observation
- Define problem or ask a question.
- Generate a testable hypothesis (educated guess):
 - Science is limited to questions that can be tested.
 - Many hypotheses should be proposed.
- Test the hypothesis.
 - Making observations
 - Doing controlled experiments.
 - Control group and test group.
 - Two groups are needed to rule out other variables as the cause of the observation.
 - The two groups are identical except for the key variable (factor being tested).
 - The control group may contain a placebo instead of the key variable.
 - placebo: an inactive substitute for a drug.
 - The placebo is sometimes called a sugar pill.
 - The number of people in both groups should be large.
 - Only one variable should be tested at a time.
 - variable: factor in an experiment that can be changed.
 - Examples of variables: instructions, age, and sex.
- Conclusion: a hypothesis can be disproved or supported but can never be proven.
- Other experiments should be designed to test remaining hypotheses.
- Publication of the results.
- If other scientists agree with your findings and can repeat your results, then the last remaining hypothesis may become a theory.
 - Numerous experiments are needed for a hypothesis to become a theory.
 - After many more experiments and much time has passed a theory may become a law. Laws are nearly irrefutable.

Student practice: make each of the false statements true by changing the underlined word or words. The statements are about the scientific method.

- The test group contains the placebo.
- The number of individuals in both the control and test groups should be small.
- Many variables should be tested at the same time.
- At the conclusion, a hypothesis can be disproved or proven.
- Only one hypothesis should be proposed.
