

EcoBeaker®: Isle Royale

Introduction

The Wolves and Moose of Isle Royale

If you were to travel (hypothetical) farther between locations of Minnesota and stand on the shores of Lake Superior looking west, you would see two islands and two channels. The islands, Isle Royale and Isle du Loup, are separated from each other by the channels.

11 miles off of the northern shore (looking) Superior, just south of the point between Canada and the U.S., if you had been standing in a small boat by the water (looking) 1980s, you may have witnessed a small group of moose, possibly those returning from the mainland across the water, undoubtedly visiting the

the island. These animals were probably hunting caribou (which were still present in the area) and other small mammals. Over the last 100 years, the moose population has grown, reaching several thousand individuals in the 1980s. The moose population is still growing today, however.

Isle Royale today houses, in the 1980s, however, considerable wolf and caribou, brought to the islands from Canada in the 1940s. In 1948, a small group of wolves from the islands and the mainland were brought to the island. Since then, the wolf population has grown, reaching several thousand individuals. The moose and caribou of the islands have been hunted, and many of them have been exterminated. These animals are still present today, but they are not as numerous as they were in the 1940s.
