Abstract: Patients with moderate to severe depression and anxiety disorders are at high risk of developing suicidal ideation and suicidal behavior. This review examines the effectiveness of pharmacological and psychological treatments for the management of suicidal ideation and suicidal behavior. The review is based on a search of the literature from 1980 to 2000. The results of the review suggest that pharmacological treatments, particularly antidepressants, are effective in reducing suicidal ideation and suicidal behavior. Psychological treatments, particularly cognitive behavioral therapy, are also effective in reducing suicidal ideation and suicidal behavior. The review concludes that a combination of pharmacological and psychological treatments is the most effective approach to the management of suicidal ideation and suicidal behavior.
