What is climate change?

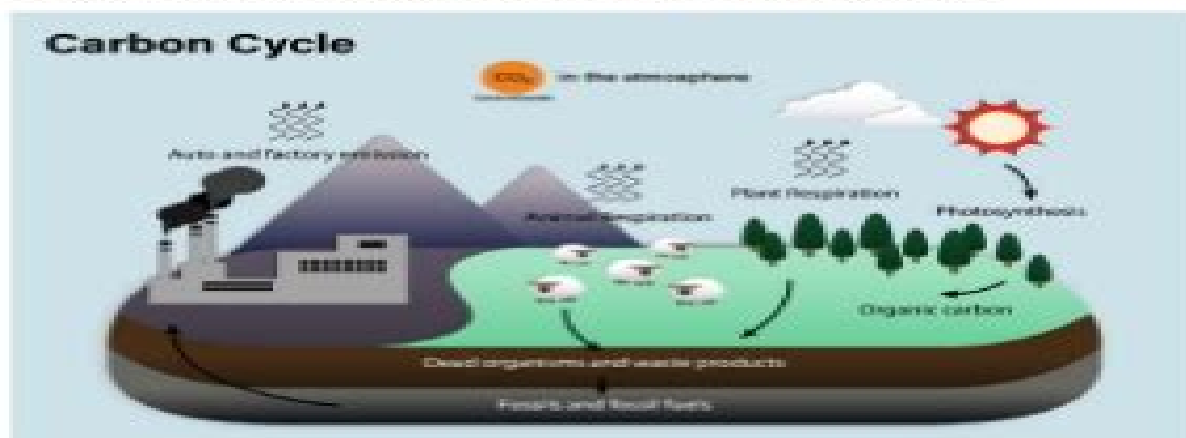

Climate change is the change in the Earth's usual weather conditions over many years. The Earth's atmosphere is heating up and human activity such as burning large amounts of fossil fuels, deforestation and the over-farming of animals and intense crop growing has accelerated the speed of this change.

What is the Earth's atmosphere?

The atmosphere is a bit like a warm blanket that traps some of the heat and protects the Earth from freezing! The atmosphere contains small amounts of carbon dioxide (CO_2), methane and water vapour. These are also known as greenhouse gases.

For many years, the level of carbon dioxide stayed at roughly the same level in the Earth's atmosphere, and this kept the temperature stable. This created just the right conditions for both the people and animals. The carbon cycle diagram shows how carbon is both used and made in the environment.

However, since the Industrial Revolution 150 years ago, the temperature on Earth has increased by just over one degree Celsius. This may not seem like a lot but in a relatively short time we are already seeing changes to our planet.

What causes global warming?

Burning fossil fuels

People discovered they could release energy by burning fossil fuels such as oil, coal and gas. We use the energy to heat our buildings and generate electricity. Many cars, lorries, ships and planes rely on fossil fuels also. However, burning fossil fuels releases more of the gas carbon dioxide into the atmosphere.
