Throughout his childhood Francisco Jimenez was a stranger in a strange land. Having to follow "the circuit" meant new farms, new places to live, new schools, and new classmates. Having completed the novel, you should understand that the title refers to the annual route the family followed in relation to the growing seasons. They chose the central valley of California because of the opportunities it offered them as farm workers.

Directions: Identify three towns where the Jimenez family lived and worked in California. At each location, research the following:

- Why is that town significant to the family?
- What crops were grown at or near that location?
- What is the town like today?
- Is agriculture still significant to the location? If not, what is?
- Find an image associated with agriculture or other significant industry at that location.
