

COMPARATIVE PARAGRAPH SAMPLE

In the article, "Silver Sprinter" and the narrative, "The Revenge of the Coach Potato" both writers utilise language devices to illustrate attitudes about health and safety in their respective texts. While the writer of Text One deploys an assonance "As we age, our bodies start to change," to convey a didactic message to adults that the human body does not remain the same as they mature. The repetition of the diphthong /ei/ in "age" and "change" would highlight the fact that the adult reader must be deliberate about their health and fitness. Contrastingly, Candida Crewe employs the repetition of the negative noun "torture" to display a discouraging attitude towards exercise and fitness. The myriad negative adjectives "bad", "useless", "crazy" and so on used in the narrative connote that she does not perceive fitness as an enjoyable activity, and would rather people did not engage themselves in it as it takes a while before they notice any tangible changes in their physiognomy.

Furthermore, both writers adopt similar structural technique to engage and persuade their audiences thereby making the texts relatable and reliable. The writer of Text One applies both the personal pronouns "you" and "I" in his article: "I" to convince adults that his intentional running marathons alongside eating healthy are contributory factors to his contented state and "you" to speak directly to the reader and nudge them to be more physically active. On the other hand, Crewe deploys the pronoun "I" mostly to emphasise to adults that her opinions about the rigour of fitness are subjective, hence, the reader is not compelled to adopt them. While Text One urges and persuades adults and everyone to embrace regular exercise and fitness, Text Two would leave them indifferent and nonchalant about the importance of physical activity.
