MacDonald, 2012-10-12 In today s world health means far more than merely the absence of illness In Rethinking Health Promotion Theodore H MacDonald sweeps away the confusion surrounding the function and position of health promotion He argues that far from being a modern innovation health promotion has existed as a distinct and separate enterprise for as long as biomedicine and cautions against health promotion becoming organized merely an off shoot of medical care Drawing on the author s experience as a World Health Organisation consultant the book also tackles the question of whether health promotion has relevance on an international scale or whether it is purely a eurocentric phenomenon Against this background individual chapters explore universal factors such as sexual health diet unemployment alcohol and tobacco use With its

Preventing Dementia? Annette Lebing, Silke Schicktanz, 2020-10-06 The conceptualization of dementia has changed dramatically in recent years with the claim that through early detection and by controlling several risk factors a prevention of dementia is possible Although encouraging and providing hope against this feared condition this claim is open to scrutiny This volume looks at how this new conceptualization ignores many of the factors which influence a dementia sufferer's prognosis including their history with education food and exercise as well as their living in different epistemic cultures The central aim is to question the concept of prevention and analyze its impact on aging people and aging societies

Promotion, 1988 Exploring Health Policy Development in Europe Anne Wood-Ritsataki, 2000 Countries in Europe have long recognized that good health care though essential is not in itself sufficient to improve health or to reduce the increasing gaps in health status between the rich and the poor In 1984 together with WHO they adopted and many attempted actively to implement what has become known as the health for all policy This called for a radical shift from health services planning to an approach based on setting objectives and targets for health requiring partnerships with industry agriculture and commerce and settings such as workplaces and schools It also required changes in behaviour and action to ensure a fairer distribution of the determinants of health such as income education employment opportunities and adequate food and housing This volume provides a broad overview of how the 51 countries in the WHO European Region set about this ambitious task The study s findings are based on replies to checklists sent to the Member States a set of country profiles given as an annex published policy documents and case studies written by people who were involved in the process in their own countries or regions Examining how countries used some of the policy instruments open to them as they strove to close the health gaps the study explores how far the rhetoric was accompanied by the necessary action and whether countries were able to move from their traditional ways of working and poses questions as to whether this approach will be sufficient to meet the challenges of the future
