

Turabian/Chicago Footnotes*

*Adapted from Turabian's A Manual for Writers of Research Papers, Theses, and Dissertations, 7th Ed. (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2007)

In the style system known as the Chicago Manual of Style, as well as in its academic cousin known as Turabian, the in-text references are provided either in footnotes or endnotes. The Turabian/Chicago style is typically used by writers in history, art history, music, philosophy, and other humanities.

How do footnotes and endnotes work?

Whenever you refer to or otherwise use material from an outside source, you must provide a citation or reference to that source. In Chicago/Turabian, this is accomplished by inserting in your text a superscript number that directs your reader to a note at the bottom of the page. The note at the bottom of the page, the "footnote," gives bibliographic information about the source. (Alternatively, your instructor may want you to use endnotes, which are exactly the same as footnotes except that the endnotes are grouped all together at the end of your paper.)

Example:

According to the Turabian manual, "Your department may specify whether you should use footnotes or endnotes, especially for a thesis or dissertation."¹

Take note of the footnote at the bottom of this page; it provides the necessary documentation for the quotation used by the author of this example. The number at the end of the footnote is the page on which the quotation is found; Turabian does not use "p." or "pp." to designate page numbers.

At the end of the paper will be a references list or bibliography page that includes a more detailed version of the footnote information. In the example given, the citation on the bibliography page looks like this:

Turabian, Kate L. A Manual for Writers of Research Papers, Theses, and Dissertations, 7th Ed. Revised by Wayne C. Booth, Gregory G. Colomb, and Joseph M. Williams. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2007.

Because the citations in the footnote and on the bibliography page include basically the same information, your instructor may consider the bibliography page unnecessary.
