

A Train Journey

I always wanted to travel with my family by train. So, we all decided to take the train to Chicago for a short spring break. Chicago is one of my favorite cities, and the kids enjoyed the journey. Of course, flying would have been faster. But I don't think flying is easier, especially these days, with all the security procedures and waiting in lines at airports.

Though we were tired in the middle of the night, the kids got on the train with the exhilaration of this adventure. "We're moving," my son Edward shouted happily with big eyes as the train began to pull away from the Hutchinson station.

I removed my shoes and lay down to try to finish my night's sleep. The sleeper car would have better enabled that, but the ordinary train seats were not too bad. An airline flight is a more miserable experience for me: not enough room, two hours of pain with my knees almost touching my chin, the hard seatback in front cracking my kneecaps with every move of the body planted in front of me. On the train, I could almost outstretch all my body in the generous legroom; apart from the opportunity to order food right at my seat.

The journey didn't feel at all as long as it really was. We all found the train ride a joy. Riding in the car for hours would have been painful. But on the train, you are free to walk around, sit in the observation carriage for a while and enjoy the views from the windows, have a nice meal in the dining car, read a book, or play a board game.

In short, the train is all about enjoying the trip, which isn't something I do so much when traveling by airline or by car when the trip seems more of a mission to get there than an experience to enjoy along the way. Chicago offers much to do for a family. This time, getting there was half the fun.
