

Comprehensive Guide to Chemical Compounds, Bonding, and Reactions

Ionic and Network Covalent Compounds

Ionic compounds and network covalent compounds are characterized by fixed ratios of elements, known as empirical formulas, but they can contain a variable number of atoms per particle, called formula units. Examples include:

- Sodium chloride (NaCl): An ionic compound formed by electrostatic attraction between Na^+ and Cl^- ions.
- Silicon dioxide (SiO_2): A network covalent compound where each silicon atom is covalently bonded to four oxygen atoms in a continuous three-dimensional network.

Key points:

- Ionic compounds typically form crystalline solids with high melting points.
- Network covalent compounds also have high melting points due to strong covalent bonds throughout the structure.
- The fixed ratio indicates a specific chemical formula, but the structure can extend infinitely in a network or lattice.

VSEPR Theory and Molecular Geometry

The Valence Shell Electron Pair Repulsion (VSEPR) theory predicts the three-dimensional shapes and bond angles of molecules by considering the repulsion between electron pairs (bonding and lone pairs) around a central atom.
