An Exploration of Financial Aid Application Patterns and College Access Ellie Marie Bruecker, 2021 I explore FAFSA completion within the high school context through a three essay dissertation Each study connects high school level FAFSA completion data from the Federal Student Aid Office to other federal or state datasets that allow for assessment of the impact of a variety of high school characteristics In paper 1 I examine high school level FAFSA completion nationwide investigating the relationships between a variety of school characteristics and FAFSA completion rates I also identify specific equity gaps in FAFSA completion both nationwide and at the state level These findings set a baseline for understanding trends in 12th grade FAFSA completion which do not necessarily mirror the patterns found in prior research using college student unit survey data In paper 2 I evaluate the compliance costs of the FAFSA as an administrative burden and test the efficacy of College Goal Wisconsin s FAFSA assistance events using three event study models I find small but positive associations between weekly FAFSA completion rates and having an event within the school district but this association does not extend to larger geographic areas In paper 3 I investigate the effectiveness of Louisiana s mandatory FAFSA policy on increasing college enrollment using a difference in differences research design In this analysis I consider rational choice theories and sociological cultural and ecological theories of college going which offer possible explanations as to why we might expect a mandatory FAFSA policy to improve college enrollment rates I find positive impacts on college enrollment among schools who had the lowest pre policy FAFSA completion rates when compared to schools with the highest pre policy completion rates However these positive results appear to be driven by schools with lower proportions of low income students and students of color I find that racial and socioeconomic inequities in college enrollment were maintained or increased into the post policy period Collectively these papers add to the literature on financial aid and the FAFSA by highlighting the important role of school contexts and identifying local state and federal actions that can bolster FAFSA completion and financial aid access

How Late Is Too Late? Laura Owen, Eric Bettinger, Bridget Terry Long, Phil Oreopoulos, 2013 Despite increases in postsecondary enrollment at American universities and colleges there are still significant gaps in who matriculates to college and persists through graduation Low income students and students of color continue to be underrepresented in institutions of higher education for many of these students a lack of awareness of available financial funding options remains a substantial barrier to college entry and completion This study investigates whether among students who begin the summer without firm college plans in place and who have yet to complete the Free Application for Federal Student Aid FAFSA the proactive offer and provision of individualized school counselor support leads to improved rates of FAFSA completion and timely college enrollment The research was conducted across three large urban school districts Albuquerque Public Schools APS Dallas Independent School District DISD and Denver Public Schools DPS All three districts serve predominantly low income Hispanic students Data come from the U S Department of Education's FAFSA completion database and the National Student Clearinghouse database to quantify the impact of summer outreach on FAFSA completion and college enrollment for students who graduated from high school uncommitted to attend college At the time of this report the research team is currently working with participating districts to gather de identified data so they can begin the intervention analysis looking specifically at any differences between treatment and control group for FAFSA completion and FAFSA initiations Research and evaluations will be presented at a later date
