Information about the program is available at www.irs.gov/efile and is included in every third-party tax product that uses the e-file technology. Many states have created e-file systems which allow taxpayers to file the information required by those states from local, state and federal returns. Some states, however, require taxpayers to file separate state returns. These states allow you either to e-file federal returns or the state returns only. E-file returns are at their most efficient when combined with federal and state returns. E-file returns require the taxpayer to acknowledge that they are not a nonresident alien, that they are not a partner in a partnership, and that they are not a partner in a partnership.
