

When members of a single assemblage or lineage, deviate evolutionarily into a range of different forms, it is adaptive radiation. These are the forms that are governed by natural selection and the usage of resources or habitats. The Darwin's finches of the Galapagos islands had shared or common ancestors whereas now, we have different sorts of modified beaks based on their food preferences. In order to suit their feeding habits, these finches have adopted different eating preferences and varied beak types. From a single seed-eating finch ancestor, different finch-species with varied dietary habits have evolved such as the blood-sucking, insectivorous entities etc.

9. Can we call human evolution as adaptive radiation?

Solution:

Human evolution can be referred to adaptive radiation as adaptive radiation is an evolutionary process which gives rise to new species from a single common ancestor but in the case of human evolution, although we share a common ancestor, we humans have undergone an eventual but progressive alteration in the eating preferences, structure of body etc. The evolution of human does not include diversification and radiating into different species which in fact is a distinguishing feature of adaptive radiation.

10. Using various resources such as your school Library or the internet and discussions with your teacher, trace the evolutionary stages of any one animal, say horse.

Solution:

During the Eocene era, the evolution of horse began with Eohippus and involved the following evolutionary phases:

Eohippus -> Mesochippus -> Merychippus -> Pliohippus -> Equus

Evolutionary traits observed were as follows:

- Increase in the size of body
- Elongated neck
- Expansion of the third digit
- Enhanced structural composition of the teeth to feed on grass
- Broadening of the limbs
- Eventual decrease in the lateral digits
- Strengthened back
- Sense organs and brain development
