

Operational Auditing
A book by Hernan Murdock
CHAPTER 8 - QUALITY CONTROL

Quality control (QC) is a process through which a business seeks to ensure that product quality is maintained or improved. Internal auditors are in the quality business. They evaluate the design of processes to determine if the structure is conducive to success. They also evaluate how processes are functioning to determine if they are operating as intended. In either case, the focus is the achievement of objectives, consistent execution with minimal errors, minimal use of input given production levels, and stability over time so the process is sustainable. With these objectives in mind, QC concepts and practices provide a solid foundation to build upon.

Assertions are affirmations or declarations; they are statements of fact regarding the financial activities of the organization. There are three main categories related to transactions, balances, and presentation assertions.

1. Transactions and events

Occurrence : The business transactions recorded actually took place.

Completeness: All business events and their related transactions that should have been recorded were recorded.

Accuracy: The transactions were recorded in the corresponding ledgers at their full amounts without errors.

Cutoff: The transactions were recorded in the appropriate accounting period; neither early nor late.

Classification: The transactions were recorded in the appropriate general ledger accounts.

2. Accounts balances

Existence: Assets, liabilities, and equity balances exist as shown.

Rights and Obligations: The organization has rights to the assets it owns and is obligated as indicated in the outstanding liabilities reported.

Completeness: All reported asset, liability, and equity balances that should have been recorded were recorded.
