

Piaget's Theory of Cognitive Development

1. Seth and Tim are in class and are asked to explain how to solve the problem of getting from one house to another that is across town when they only have 15 minutes to get there. Seth and Tim think about it and discuss the streets in town and the traffic situation at various times throughout the day. They come up with an answer without actually having to drive both distances to see which one is faster. They are in the FORMAL OPERATIONS stage as evidenced by their ability to engage in hypothetic-deductive reasoning about abstract situations that are not tied to concrete reality.
2. Ming knows that pouring a liquid into a different shaped container does not change the amount of liquid. Also, she can reason logically, but she cannot handle abstractions (e.g., proverbs). According to Piaget, Ming has probably achieved the CONCRETE OPERATIONS stage of cognitive development.
3. According to Piaget, the SENSORY-MOTOR stage of cognitive development is characterized by coordination of sensory information and motor activity, and the lack of the use of symbols to represent the external world.
4. Cynthia knows that she has the same amount of play dough whether she makes it into a ball or a snake. Cynthia has only recently achieved this concept and is entering the CONCRETE OPERATIONS stage of cognitive development.
5. Sharon wants more than one cracker and she is very happy when her dad breaks her one cracker in half because now she has two. According to Piaget, Sharon is probably at the PRE-OPERATIONAL stage of cognitive development.
6. When children reach the FORMAL OPERATIONS stage of cognitive development they are able to think and reason more or less as adults.
7. You take an infant's toy and place it behind the couch. The infant immediately begins playing with another toy having seemingly forgotten about the first. The infant is in the SENSORY-MOTOR stage and has not yet acquired OBJECT PERMANENCE.
8. Angelina views water poured from a glass of regular shape into one of an irregular shape and a different diameter. Because she has just seen the water poured into the second glass and can imagine the reverse of pouring water from the second glass back into the first glass, Angelina is certain that the amount of water in the two glasses is the same – even though the water levels in the two glasses are quite different. Angelina is demonstrating the principle of CONSERVATION/REVERSIBILITY and is in the CONCRETE OPERATIONS stage of cognitive development.
9. Three month old Georgia shakes her rattle because she loves to hear it, but when the rattle slips under the covers, it is "out of sight, out of mind." She doesn't search for it and she doesn't cry because it is gone. According to Piaget, Georgia is in the SENSORY-MOTOR stage of cognitive development and has not yet developed OBJECT PERMANENCE.
