The Law of Demand

The law of demand states that as the price of a good or service decreases, the quantity demanded increases. This is a fundamental principle of economics. For example, if the price of a good decreases, more people will want to buy it. This is because the good is now cheaper. The law of demand is also known as the downward-sloping demand curve. It is a graph that shows the relationship between price and quantity demanded. The law of demand is a key concept in economics and is used to explain many economic phenomena.
