

Lab 2.2.9 Command Line Fundamentals – Instructor Version 2500

Objective

- Log into a router and go to the user and privileged modes.
- Use several basic router commands to determine how the router is configured.
- Use the router HELP facility.
- Use command history and editing features.
- Logout of the router.

Background/Preparation

HyperTerminal is a simple Windows-based terminal emulation program that can be used to connect to the router's console port. A PC with HyperTerminal provides a keyboard and monitor for the router. Connecting to the console port with a rollover cable and using HyperTerminal is the most basic way to access a router for checking or changing its configuration.

Set up a network similar to the one in the diagram. Any router that meets the interface requirements may be used. Possible routers include 800, 1600, 1700, 2500, 2600 routers, or a combination. The configuration output used in this lab is produced from a 1721 series router. Other routers may produce slightly different output.

The following resources will be required:

- Workstation with a serial interface and HyperTerminal
- Cisco Router
- Rollover, or console, cable for connecting the workstation to the router
