INTRODUCTION

Lead generation is critical to every business's success. It's the process of identifying and reaching out to potential customers who are interested in your products or services.

But, how does a business boost their lead generation?

When your business is in need to convert more website visitors into customers, there are several ways to boost your lead generation.

Page 3

DEFINING A LEAD

Basically, a lead is a person who shows interest in your company's services or products. Instead of receiving random cold calls from someone who gets your contact information, you hear from a business with which you've already established a connection.

For instance, suppose you took an online survey to learn how to stay fit and healthy. If you got an email from the fitness firm that hosted the survey, it'd be far less intrusive than if they called you with no knowledge of whether you provide fitness services.

From a business perspective, the information the fitness organization gathered about you from your survey about health and fitness communication to meet the potential client's existing needs.
