Articles of Faith Dave Jordano, 2009 In Articles of Faith photographer Dave Jordano documents the at once humble and dynamic storefront churches of Chicago s African American neighborhoods These churches which dot the South and West Sides of the city are truly community churches individualized and idiosyncratic they cater to the specific needs and wants of their ministers and members For five years Jordano spent his weekends traveling to many of these African American community churches in Chicago getting to know their pastors and parishioners This attention to personal detail is highly evident in his exquisite photographs that capture the identity and personalities of each church from the hand lettered signs to the icons His interior images of the now sacred spaces illustrate how the congregants create a comforting environment of affirmation hope and family for members who often live in neighborhoods marked by high crime and troubled homes Infused in the spaces of these makeshift churches is a sense of history that traces back to a time during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries when the only form of open expression available to African Americans was religious worship and practice These images illuminate a vital component of urban life for many African Americans living not only in Chicago but throughout urban America Jordano s photographs speak to the links between past and present religion and geography photography and architectural space they speak on behalf of a uniquely African American experience
