Civil War

The Civil War was an armed conflict in the United States of America, taking place between 1861 and 1865. The term "Civil War" refers to an organized war between groups within the same country. The difference between a civil war and a revolution is that, in a civil war, both sides continue to be the legal government of a country, whereas a revolution involves one group trying to change the system of government entirely. The Civil War was fought over the issue of slavery, as well as for the states' right to secede, or leave the Union independently.

Leading up to the war, the United States was composed of 36 states, each with its own laws and government. The Constitution was a platform of abolishing slavery in all states and areas. The nation argued that Southern states, who thought it was their "Constitutional" right to have slaves, and South Carolina was the first to secede in 1860, citing the rights of citizens to leave the Union if they chose.

The states of Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, and South Carolina also seceded in 1861, and under these states formed together to form the Confederate States of America. President Lincoln feared that an even stronger war might be fought, and two months afterwards, he first declared called for the Confederacy to secede the Union, but he refused to fight because of peace with them because he thought that would legitimize them. He also ordered all slaves held in Confederate territory to be freed.

The thought about the war of the war is from Lincoln to South Carolina. The Confederacy thought that the Union government, who had been broken up in the first during all these events, was not the Union anymore. The Confederacy then opened fire on the fort with cannons and captured it.

In response, Lincoln began joining soldiers and calling for volunteers, to his surprise. Two other states, Virginia, Tennessee, Arkansas, and North Confederacy, which most of these states had been refused to secede at first, were joined the Confederacy. Most soldiers were from Virginia and remained in the Union.

Both sides had recruitment campaigns and made promises to attract the Southwesterners. In 1862, when the Southwesterners were taken away and sent to the front lines, the Southwesterners were taken away and sent to the front lines.

The first battle of the war, which took place in 1861, was the Battle of Fort Sumter. The battle was fought for three days, and the Union forces, which had been in the fort since 1846, were forced to surrender. The battle was a tactical draw, but it was the first battle of the war, and it was the only battle in which the Confederacy did not suffer any casualties.

The war was a long and bloody conflict, with many battles and a high death toll. The war was fought for four years, and it was the most destructive war in American history. The war was fought for four years, and it was the most destructive war in American history.
