

Civics Dynamic DBQ

How does the dynamic, a process or system characterized by constant change, nature of our Constitution help our government keep up with the changing times? Because of the flexibility of our constitution, we are able to change it on a day to day basis. The variation of how the Constitution can be changed include formal changes, interpretations, and traditions. Formal changes, also known as amendments, an addition or alteration to legal document, is one way the government can adjust our constitution to the changing times.

Although this method is less common because of the long process, it doesn't mean it's not possible. In 1965, the war of Vietnam arose, and the second most recent amendment was added. According to document E, the war required soldiers to be drafted at the age of 18. At the time the voting age was 21, and the average soldier was 26, which meant they could vote for who was sending them out to danger. It was thought that as long as soldiers were drafted to the war at 18, it was only fair to let them vote. The 26th amendment is an example of how we keep up with the changing times with the use of formal changes.

Established in Article 2, section 2, Of the Constitution, traditions, the transmission of customs from generation to generation, are also known as the unwritten laws for the President. The tradition of the Cabinet dates back to the beginning of the Presidency itself. As claimed by Document A, George Washington, the very first President, started the Cabinet Block 3/4 which held 6 positions as of September 1789. The dynamic nature of our Constitution allows the current and/or future presidents to modify the roles to his needs. As of July 2013, 11 departments have been added to the Cabinet.

As our country grows, the President has the power to establish departments in the Cabinet to assist him in any subject the President may require support for his duties. "Legislation is powerless to eradicate racial instincts or to abolish distinctions based upon physical differences, and the attempt to do so can only result in accentuating the difficulties of the present situation." Interpretations are also a part of the dynamic features of our Constitution. Interpretations are split into two, Judicial review and the Elastic Clause.

Judicial review allows the Judicial branch to "change" the law to adjust to the morals of the time. Because the Supreme Court cannot be fired, they have no influence towards their decision. The flexibility of our Constitution gives the opportunity for the interpretations of the Supreme Court to change over the years. As an example, during the case of Plessy v. Ferguson of 1896, the Supreme Court ruled having separated cars was constitutional as long as it was "separate but equal," only because this case was a social issue and not political (Document B).
