ACTIVITY WORKBOOK

SHARON ANTHONY, KEVIN L. BRAUN, HEATHER MERNITZ

What is the difference between a trans-fat and an omega-3 fatty acid?
How is acid rain formed?
How much energy comes from my food?

ChemConnections modules, developed with support from the National Science Foundation, provide a guided, discovery-based approach to promote students' deep understanding of a broad range of chemistry concepts and problem-solving techniques. Based on those modules, this workbook includes fifty-nine classroom activities set in the context of societal and environmental issues. Each research-based, classroom-tested activity is designed to take between thirty and ninety minutes and may be used to enrich lecture, recitation, or lab.

Activities have been written as independent worksheets so that instructors can incorporate them without having to make significant changes to their courses. Each worksheet begins with a central question and basic information to set the environmental or societal context. Students are then asked to work through a series of questions that help them gain a deeper understanding of the chemical concepts by putting those concepts into practice in a real-world setting.

Making it relevant Peter Nentwig, David Waddington, 2006 Teaching in context has become an accepted and often welcomed way of teaching science in both primary and secondary schools The conference organised by IPN and the University of York Science Education Group Context based science curricula drew on the experience of over 40 science educators and 10 projects The book is arranged in four parts Part A consists of two papers one on situated learning and the other on implementation of new curricula Part B contains descriptions of five major curricula in different countries why they were introduced how they were developed and implemented and evaluation results Part C gives descriptions of three projects that are of smaller scale and their materials are used as interventions in other more conventional curricula There is also a contribution on some fundamental research where modules of work are written to examine how best to design context based curricula Finally Part D consist of two chapters one summarising some of the findings that came out of the chapters in the three earlier parts and the second looks at the future
